Abstract of the Sattriya workshop Project

Mahapush Srimanta Sankaradev and his various art Forms :

Mahapurush Srimanta Sankaradeva is the greatest Assamese ever born on the soil of Assam, and also one of the great humanitarians on this earth. His contribution to mankind is astonishingly remarkable. At the same time, he was a religious preacher, philosopher, poet, litterateur, playwright, philologist, architect, sculptor, painter, musician, dancer, and social reformer as well as many sorts of disciplines.

He structured the Assamese society through the assimilation of diverse understandings of different communities. He planted the seed of love and regard within the people's hearts by assembling the people without measuring caste and creed for spiritual discourses under a sole roof which is still blooming in each and every corner of Assam in the form of a community centre known as Namghar.

After the demise of Sankaradeva, religious preachers became divided in their point of view and this resulted in the formation of four Samhatis. Consequently, some establishments emerged in each Samhati. Later on, they are acquainted in the name of Satra. Gradually Satras became influential and led society as a guide of spirituality

Satras have been taking an important role in the enrichment of the Sankaradeva's art and culture through regular practices not only for rituals but also for showcasing in different occasional ceremonies and considered its aesthetic value to be nothing less than emancipation (moksha) which marks the consummation of three social values, namely, moral duty (dharma), wealth (artha), pleasure (kama).

The art form now popularly known as Sattriya is recognized as one of the classical art forms of India for its scriptural value.
